Sandy Carmichael black and white No.3 Barbarians v. All Blacks match worn long-sleeved shirt, Umbro, 44 with button-up collar and embroidered cloth badge BFC, the front of the shirt dedicated and autographed by Sandy Carmichael, WORN V ALL BLACKS 73, the reverse also autographed by Sandy Carmichael, areas of staining and pitch wear The above shirt was worn by Sandy Carmichael in arguably in one of the greatest and most famous rugby matches in history, the match where Gareth Edwards scored without doubt The Greatest Try. In the final test match of the 1972-73 tour played on 27th January 1973 at Cardiff Arms Park, The Barbarians defeated New Zealand 23-11. This match was also the first time the Barbarian players were allowed to keep their shirts after the match. Sandy was born in Glasgow on 2nd February 1944 and as amateur played tighthead prop for the highly successful West of Scotland side, regarded as a powerhouse of rugby in the 1970s. He created a then record at international level when he became the first Scottish player to reach 50 caps, his debut was against Ireland played on 25th February 1967 at Murrayfield, he was not in the original starting XV but David Rollo fell ill and Carmichael was thrust into the fray at tight-head then establishing himself as a mainstay of the Scotland team, with notable victories against Australia and South Africa. His final appearance was again against Ireland in Dublin, eleven years later. He was also picked for the British and Irish Tour of New Zealand in 1971 and was awarded an MBE in 1977. This item offers an extraordinary opportunity to own a tangible link to an unparalleled moment in rugby history, and would make a remarkable addition to any serious sports memorabilia collection. As a game-worn shirt from one of the most legendary matches ever played, it holds a unique and enduring appeal for both rugby fans and collectors alike.

84 Alex Miller un-numbered blue Rangers long-sleeved shirt, 1973, Umbro with crew-neck collar and embroidered badge inscribed RFC CENTENARY 1873-1973 The following lots 84 to 185 relate to the career of Rangers legend, manager and coach Alex Miller. Alex Miller was born in Glasgow on 4th July 1949, his youth career started with Clydebank Strollers, then Rangers Youth in January 1967 under Scot Symon, Alex would sign his professional contract and would stay with Rangers until January 1983, at the time of his departure, there had only been seven Rangers managers and Alex's had played under five of those, making 309 appearances in defence scoring 33 goals along the way. He was coached firstly by David White and making his way into the first team picture, playing in the 1970 Scottish League Cup Final and then playing in the 1971 Scottish Cup Final against Old Firm rivals Celtic with, as it turned out, a broken jaw! Such dedication could only ever bring him closer in the hearts and estimations of their loyal fans, and it did. Sadly, then manager Willie Waddell omitted him from the squad that lifted the 1972 European Cup Winners Cup after using him mainly as a second-choice player, but the arrival of Jock Wallace saw him brought back into the fold and he played a huge part in the lifting of three League titles, three Scottish Cups (and a further four runners up medals) and five Scottish League Cups to add the collection. A career in coaching started out in South China before his homeland return saw him take charge of Morton followed by rivals St Mirren where he guided the club into European competition, giving the Paisley based Club an unforgettable night under floodlights at Love Street that saw them dispatch Slavia Prague by three goals to nil, moulding a side that would win the 1987 Scottish Cup after his departure. He went on to win the Cup with Hibs whilst guiding them through what were troubled times for the Edinburgh Club whilst also leading them into the UEFA Cup as well as the 1993 Scottish League Cup Final for good measure. The then Scotland manager Craig Brown would call upon Alex's coaching talents and he was with the International side from 1993 through to 1999, which would include Euro 96 and 1998 World Cup Finals in France. A spell as assistant to Gordon Strachan at Coventry City was followed by him taking the reigns in the granite City at Aberdeen before accepting the invitation Of Gerard Houllier to become Director of Scouting at Liverpool, continuing his work under Rafa Benitez before playing a huge part in the Reds winning both the Champions League in 2005 and FA Cup in 2006 as coach. Further spells abroad as manager in China, Sweden and Russia saw him eventually head once more back to Scotland, once again with St Mirren. An incredible career! We are honoured to offer these items from the personal collection of someone who epitomised Club loyalty as a player and was respected as a coach by all he worked for and with.
